Presenter 1: Now that you each know a little bit about the problems facing your area of the city, let’s talk about your roles on the committee.

Presenter 2: There are four roles on each committee: a medical officer, safety officer, environmental consultant, and an urban planner. If your group has more than four people, you can have two of the same role. Let’s take a look at what these people do and might be concerned with.

Presenter 1: A Medical Officer’s main concern is about human health. This includes how light may affect humans. They should also work closely with the safety officer.

Presenter 2: A Safety Officer is concerned with the safety of humans and property as well as crime. They should work with the medical officer on aspects of human safety.

Presenter 1: An Environmental Consultant is concerned about energy efficiency, consumption, and carbon footprint of the lights, as well as any effects on wildlife and the earth. There is a worksheet available to help you calculate these things.

Presenter 2: An Urban Planner handles the logistics, construction, and placement of the actual lights. They should worry about how many lights are needed, where they should be placed, how tall they need to be, et cetera.

Presenter 1: Be sure to work with your team to tackle as many issues with your part of the city as possible. You may also want to work with people from other groups who have the same role as you.
